JOHN WESLEY POWELL-RUNNING THE COLORADO RAPIDS

John Wesley Powell was born on March 24, 1834 at Mt. Morris, New York. After the Civil War he was a professor of geology at Illinois Wesleyan and later at Illinois State Normal University.

On May 24th, 1869 with 4 rowboats and 10 men he left Green River, Wyoming on a 1000 mile trip down the Green and Colorado Rivers, through great chasms and dangerous rapids in the last great unknown area of the American West. The exploration and mapping of these regions in his "Report of the Lands of the Arid Regions" was a fore-runner of today's conservation and land reforms.

The design was prepared by Miss Louise Davis of Nashville, Tennessee, a retired art teacher and great-great niece of Powell.

The idea was taken from a steel engraving (left) with the title "Running A Rapid" from Powell's report to the Congress on his exploration.

A National Archives photograph of Powell's boat tied up in the Grand Canyon during the 2nd expedition in 1872.

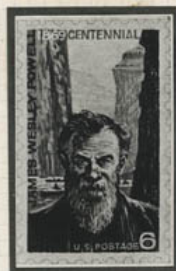

Howard E. Paine, a National Geographic artist prepared a group of sketches, including two full-face portraits, two portraits with map background and two based on the photo of Powell's boat.

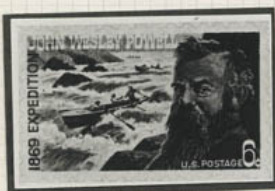

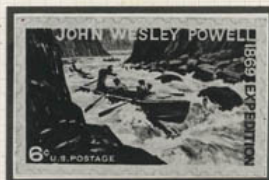

Rudolph Wendelin, the Smokey Bear artist of the Agriculture Department's Forest Service and the designer of the Forest Conservation, Range Conservation and John Muir US stamps, heard of the Powell stamp controversy. He borrowed a set of the Powell expedition photos and went to work.

His first effort was the full-faced Powell with a canyon background but with the incorrect name James instead of John Wesley Powell.

With the steel engraving as a background he did the river scene with the river flowing to the right and Powell standing in the tiller of the first boat, his arm amputated below the elbow having lost it at the Civil War battle of Shiloh.

Later Wendelin prepared two more sketches, one with the Powell portrait and the river scene and the other a river view with boat and water flowing to the left instead.

Bureau artist H. Mildner was given the sketch and made only one minor change and that was to move the lettering in from the right side of the drawing.
