Dear Mr. Ladany,

The Honourable Renaude Lapointe, former Speaker of the Senate of Canada, has asked me to reply to your letter of September 15, 1980.

In answer to your request, I am pleased to enclose a copy of a recent Canadian government publication, entitled How Canadians Govern Themselves by Eugene Forsey.

You will note that, in addition to explaining the Canadian parliamentary system, the booklet has an interesting section in which the author discusses the differences between the Canadian and American systems of government.

Since you referred in your letter to the Senate,
I am enclosing: (1) a brief explanation of the Senate of Canada, based on a text prepared recently for publication in a forthcoming edition of the Canada Year Book; and (2) a more detailed explanation of the Senate from a book entitled Confederation at the Crossroads: The Canadian Constitution by E. Russell Hopkins, McLelland & Stewart, 1968.

Also enclosed is a list of some of the special editions of Senate reports that have been published in the period from 1968 to 1980.

Should you require any additional information,
please do not hesitate to let me know.

Yours sincerely,

Raymond L. du Plessis

Canadian Art

The year 1880 proved to be a good year for Canadian art. The Royal Canadian Academy of Arts (a nationwide association of creative artists) and the National Gallery of Canada came into being. In conjunction with the centennial of these events, the Post Office will issue four stamps portraying works created by Academy members and forming part of the collection of the National Gallery.

Governor General Dufferin first broached the idea of a Canadian academy of arts. His successor, the Marquis of Lorne, took up the proposal. Difficulties impeded progress. Lorne noted that the project caused "a marvellous amount of bitterness and bad language," and that "half the artists are ready just now to choke the other half with their paint brushes." Nevertheless, encouraged by his wife, Princess Louise, Queen Victoria's daughter, he persisted, hoping that the Academy would improve Canadian cultural life by promoting excellence of design, by supporting art schools throughout the country, and by founding a National Gallery at Ottawa.

To accomplish the last goal, each person, as a condition of membership in the Academy, donated one of his or her works to the Gallery. Since 1880, academicians have given art now worth approximately $2 000 000 to the institution.

Lucius O'Brien (1832-1899) was born at Shanty Bay, Upper Canada. He graduated from Upper Canada College and worked as a civil engineer. After at least twenty years of amateur painting, he turned professional in 1872. His great diplomatic skills smoothed the foundation of the Academy and he thus became its first president. His diploma work, an oil painting entitled Sunrise on the Saguenay, reproduced on one of the 35-cent stamps, was one of the first paintings acquired by the National Gallery in 1880.

Thomas Fuller (1822-1898) was born in England. He arrived in Canada in 1857 and went into partnership in Toronto with Chilion Jones. They designed the original Parliament Buildings, first occupied in 1865 and destroyed by fire in 1916. Fuller's pen-and-watercolour drawing of the structure, deposited in the National Gallery in 1883, is reproduced on the second 35-cent stamp. In 1881 the Public Works Department made Fuller its Chief Architect.

Robert Harris (1849-1919) was born in Wales and migrated to Prince Edward Island in 1856 with his parents. He achieved national acclaim after painting The Fathers of Confederation. His genre painting, A Meeting of the School Trustees, purchased by the National Gallery in 1886, is featured on one of the 17-cent stamps. Some regard it as the "first work with a feminist theme in Canadian art."

Louis-Philippe Hébert (1850-1917) was born of Acadian descent in eastern Canada. He began carving at the age of seven. After working in various jobs and serving with the Papal Zouaves, he became a sculptor. Perhaps his best known work is the Maisonneuve Monument in Montreal, an example of his interest in Canadian history. The sculpture reproduced on the second 17-cent stamp is his diploma work in bronze, entitled Inspiration, which was deposited with the National Gallery in 1906.

Jean Morin Designers, a Montreal firm, is responsible for the graphic design and typography for this stamp issue. For the first time in recent years, a lighter version of the Helvetica typeface in capitals has been used for "Canada".
