The image displays two long, narrow cigarette packs, likely from the 1940s, arranged diagonally. The packs are heavily worn and feature intricate designs, including portraits and text. The top pack is labeled "7 OUNCES TOBACCO" and "U.S. INTERREX". The bottom pack is labeled "7 OUNCES TOBACCO" and "U.S. INTERREX". Both packs show signs of age and damage, with some text and designs faded or obscured by wear. The packs are held in place by black strips of tape. The top pack has a red stamp that reads "STAMP" and "U.S. INTERREX". The bottom pack has a red stamp that reads "STAMP" and "U.S. INTERREX". The packs are made of a material that appears to be paper or cardboard, and they have a blue-tinted appearance. The designs on the packs include portraits of men, possibly presidents, and various decorative elements. The text on the packs is in a serif font, and it is arranged in a way that is easy to read. The overall appearance of the packs is that of well-used, vintage items.
