1879 American Bank Note Printing

Continental Bank Note Co. was awarded a second contract which covered the period of 1877-1881. On February 4, 1879, the American Bank Note Company took over Continental, and the contract was assumed by American. Since American acquired all the old plates used by National when the two companies consolidated, the American Bank Note stamps all bear the same secret marks. Those plates which did not previously have secret marks were not altered in any way.

One can, however, differentiate between the stamps printed by Continental and American by determining which type of paper was used. Both National and Continental used hard paper, which is fairly white, has a smooth surface, and is uniform in thickness. In addition, the stamp is fairly translucent when held up to a window or a bright light. Hard paper is sometimes better referred to as being a grayish or bluish white.

American, on the other hand, used soft paper, which is characterized by being thicker and having a coarser and uneven texture. When compared to hard paper, it is yellowish in appearance and is not as translucent.

Jefferson: 10¢ Brown. Type I. Two types of 10¢ Americans exist. Type I is similar to the National, in that it bears no secret mark. The difference between the two is, of course, the paper used.

Jefferson: 10¢ Brown. Type II. This variety, like the Continental stamp, has a dash in the ball to the left of the numeral "1". Once again, the soft paper identifies this stamp as an American issue.

1882

Garfield: 5¢ Yellow brown. An officer in the Union Army during the Civil War, James A. Garfield also served for nine terms in the House of Representatives before being elected as our 20th President. Issued five years after his assassination, the intended color was black, to symbolize mourning. Mrs. Garfield, however, did not like the proofs and suggested brown be used instead.
