act was put into effect. On September 6, 1888, a revised stamp, bearing the inscription: "Secures immediate delivery at any post office," was issued.

The trademark of these Special Delivery stamps was the running post office messenger, who was often referred to as the "Running Speedy Boy." Interestingly, he is one of the few postal figures who was modeled after a living person. In order to get the proper running action, the engraver Charles Skinner used his young nephew, Frederick Pauling, as a model. During one session, Mr. Skinner was so engrossed in his work he didn't realize the length of time the boy was forced to stand on one foot. Eventually, young Frederick became completely exhausted and collapsed to the floor. In 1902, the design was changed to picture a young messenger riding a delivery bicycle. Since then, various other designs have been used.
