Arkona is a small community roughly 100 miles Northeast of Detroit, MI, located in the cities of Sarnia and London. It was first settled around 1820-1830; a post was opened in 1851, though Arkona did not become an official village until June 76. The village was known for being situated at an "important road junction", being a number of small industries, such as a basket factory and several mills, to its local communities.
