On a press imported from England by "Mr. Joss Glover" and was set up by Stephen Daye in 1639, in a house of the first president of Harvard College, produced the "Freeman's Oath". This first piece of printing produced in this country was largely in the interest of moral independence in voting and other civic duties. Not a single copy of this printing is known to exist today. Harvard University does not possess the old press of Stephen Daye.

"FOR DEFENSE"

BOMBING SQUADRON 4

Painted on the sides of U. S. Navy airplanes are symbols such as the one on this envelope — insignia of the squadrons to which they belong. Millions of American citizens have never seen them, but today, more than ever before in history, they are symbols of our national security. Behind them lie the proud records of the Navy's flying forces — the traditions of service and achievement that are a priceless heritage of our National Defense.

Warren G. Harding, 29th President, 1921-1923

Born in Ohio, early learned the details of printing and editing, and a publisher by the time he was twenty. Took a leading part in the business and political life of his community and state. Served in the state Senate and in the United States Senate. When Harding became president he faced reconstruction along many lines, following the World War. The limitations of armaments conference at Washington, to which he invited representatives from all interested countries, was an outstanding accomplishment of his administration. President Harding was family stricken scarcely two years after taking the oath of office. (1865-1923)

VIA AIR MAIL

TWENTIETH ANNIVERSARY

Air Mail

Daily aerial mail service between New York and Washington inaugurated May 15, 1918. Schedule called for total flying mileage of 436 miles daily. Special air mail stamp of 24c issued, later reduced to 16c, 8c, and the present 6c. Maintained at first by the War Department, this service, which demonstrated its practicability, later in the year was turned over to the Post Office Department.
